POLICE RAID THIEVES DEN

Find Stolen Plunder of all Descriptions

THIEVES HAD RENDEZVOUS

F. C. Merritt and Burt Burns in Jail

In the arrest of F. C. Merritt and Burt Burns the police have concluded that the mystery surrounding the disappearance of various articles from all parts of the city has been solved and that they have unearthed a nest of thieves.

When the old house at 226 North Wichita street, which has been the rendezvous of these men, was raided and searched by the police yesterday, plunder of every description was found piled high in every nook and corner. Several of the many articles found have already been identified by the owners, but the greater amount has not been claimed. After the house had been searched the officers turned their attention to the premises and a great deal of stolen goods was found underneath the house. It is generally supposed the two men had a market for their booty, for the greater amount of that which has already been found could not possibly have been of any use to the thieves unless there was some means of turning it into money.

There was found stored away in the old house blacksmith tools, carpenter's tools, paint and painter's supplies, lace curtains, clothing, hats, lumber, pickets, little china dishes; in fact, it seems that nothing was too small for these thieves to carry home.

The house chosen by the thieves in which to store away their ill-gotten plunder is an ideal rendezvous for a gang of thieves. It is a little, old, tumble-down house which sets back from the street and is surrounded by a grove of fruit trees and a tall hedge. While it is almost in the center of the city, it is hidden by the trees and hedge and very little can be seen of it from the street. These two men have lived there for some time, and while they were seldom known to work, it was never suspected by even the persons living in the immediate neighborhood that the old house harbored a nest of thieves. It is now thought that they have been practicing their nefarious work for a long time, for some of the articles found in the house have been missing for weeks.

The credit for bringing the thieves to justice is due to Dan Freese. Mr. Freese is erecting a new house on the site of the old Ford property at the corner of Pine street and Waco avenue. Several times during the construction of the building tools and other articles were found missing. Sometimes they would be taken at night and often they would disappear at the noon hour while the workmen were at dinner. Sunday two pairs of shoes belonging to men who were working on the building disappeared. Sunday evening Mr. Freese planned to lay for the culprits, and taking a shotgun with him, hid in the new house. He had no more than secreted himself when he saw two men stealthily approach the building and carry off lumber. He jumped from his hiding place and succeeded in laying hold of one of the thieves. The fellow showed fight and tried to get away, but Mr. Freese pulled the gun on him and he changed his mind. The other fellow escaped, but Mr. Freese called a policeman and the man he had captured was taken to the police station, where it was found that it was Merritt. Burns was captured Monday.

The two men were arraigned before Judge Alexander yesterday afternoon and Merritt pleaded guilty to the charge of larceny. He was sentenced to sixty days in jail. In default of bond Burns was committed to jail to await a hearing.

BAKERY TEAM RAN AWAY.

They Damaged a Buggy but Not Themselves.

About 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon a team hitched to the Wolfe bakery wagon became frightened while in front of the store on South Main street, and started on a run. They turned east on William street and just east of the city building plunged into a buggy at the curb. The two horses fell to the pavement in the mixup and were caught before they could get up. The buggy was considerably smashed up, but the bakery wagon was only slightly damaged.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

The production of Winston Churchill's play, "The Crisis," which James K. Hackett offers at the Crawford Friday, May 15, is the same in every respect of company and scenic environments as participated in its great success last spring, where he was able to present it before the end of the season, with which he opened his present season in Philadelphia to the largest business done in that city this year and later participated in the New York and Boston runs. The performance will therefore be of that same high class of excellence which Mr. Hackett has always striven to maintain. The leading characters of Mr. Churchill's play are all retained in the play it is said and the incidental historical ones carefully kept out of sight, but not of mind. The selections of the scenes chosen from the novel had been carefully made, so as to impress the chronological order of events firmly upon the mind of the beholder. The first act is placed in the law office of Judge Whipple during November, 1867, and includes the first meeting of Stephen Brice, the young Bostonian, and Virginia Carvel, the sweet Southern girl, and gives the motive for her hatred of him, because he, stung to the quick by the first sale of slaves he has ever witnessed, buys, to set free, the young negro girl whom Miss Carvel desires as a servant. The second act, in 1860, in the dance at Colonel Carvel's country place, showing Miss Carvel's restlessness under the increasing and unending obligations she seems forced to accept from Brice, and gives the scene from the novel in which she mistakes him for her cousin Clarence, to whom she is engaged. The third act, May, 1861, shows the clash between the civil authorities, who are Southern in sentiment, and the government recruits who are striving to battle the rebellious plans of the state militia, and transpires in the parlors of Colonel Carvel's house, he being under suspicion of having active Southern sympathies. The fourth act, May, 1861, is again in Judge Whipple's office, and includes in its incidents the threatened arrest of Colonel Carvel, who has returned from the Southern army to be at the death-bed of his friend Whipple, the treachery of the renegade Elphalett Hopper, and the discovery and confession by Virginia Carvel that she loves the Northerner, Stephen Brice. To those who have read the book it is said, the play will be thoroughly intelligible, and possess the same thrill which has made the book so popular.

One of the best attractions will soon be seen at the Crawford when Ibsen's "Ghosts" is presented by Mary Shaw. The St. Paul correspondent of the New York Dramatic Mirror, May 9, says: "Ibsen's Ghosts as presented by Mary Shaw and a very capable company was an exceptionally artistic dramatic offering at the Metropolitan opera house April 23-25. The play is admirably constructed and is a remarkable study in personalities. Each character was portrayed intelligently. Mary Shaw was excellent in the leading role of Mrs. Alving and worked out the part skillfully. She has a graceful and attractive personality, and possesses a rarely beautiful voice. Her reading of her lines was a delight. Frederick Lewis, Oswald Alving, contributed an exceptionally strong piece of acting. Maurice Wilkinson was decidedly good in the part of Pastor Menders. Charles A. Gay made the part of Jacob Engstrand a very strong one. Virginia Kline, as Regina Engstrand, played the part with marked skill. The play was staged attractively. Good and appreciative audiences applauded liberally."

The following telegram was received by the Eagle last night from Denver, Colo.: The opening performance of Ibsen's "Ghosts," by Mary Shaw and supporting company, was given at the Broadway this evening before an immense audience. The tremendous strength of the play stirred the spectators in a manner they have not experienced for years. Miss Shaw's success was instantaneous, her admirable work justifying the reports that have compared her with Bernhardt and Duse. There were several curtain calls at the conclusion of each act and when the curtain fell for the last time the audience remained in their seats and to bow their acknowledgments several times. Denver has seldom witnessed such a dramatic triumph.

V. L. Moore has resigned his position with the Rockaway dry goods company and accepted a position as floor manager at the S. & M. store.
